Mycoplasma hyorhinitis was separated into the plasmid DNA-free and antigen-free fractions by treatment with lactate dehydrogenase. Fluorescent antibody staining of the two fractions showed that more than 90% of the Mycoplasma antigen and over 90% of the DNA were eliminated from the cell surface during treatment with lactate dehydrogenase. The two fractions of antigen and DNA were dialysed on cellulose membrane and fractionated into individual fractions by chromatography. The antigenic activity of the dialysed fractions was comparable to the standard antigen of the ATCC strain. The DNA in the dialysed fraction was much more active than that in the untreated antigen-free fraction.MOSCOW, November 24. /TASS/.
